

ARTICHOKE

Open storage exhibition
Auckland City Art Gallery
October 1981 – May 1982

ARTICHOKE

Artichoke is not an exhibition as such. It is a means of alternative storage while the painting and sculpture storage sections of the Gallery are being reconstructed. Hanging paintings on the Gallery's walls is the safest method of storage in the circumstances and enables a great number of paintings, many of which are not regularly exhibited, to be simultaneously presented to the public. Thus, Artichoke gives a fair idea of the range of this Gallery's holdings. But, by the same token, it also points out the limitations of a collection which can only expand as far and as fast as limited acquisitions funds allow. To help remedy this situation, we are soliciting donations towards a 'picture purchase'.

If Artichoke makes a particular point, it is surely this: the collection is diverse enough to accommodate all levels of interest. Landscape, portraiture, genre, religious art, still life, as well as figurative, expressionist and abstract art in its various forms are represented to a greater or lesser extent. Some areas obviously require development. We appeal to you, the public, to help us do so.

The paintings and sculptures displayed in Artichoke do not comprise the whole of the Gallery's collection. A great number of prints, drawings and photographs which are housed elsewhere in the building have not been affected by the reconstruction of the East Wing of the Gallery and are consequently not included in this presentation. In addition, some works requiring conservation treatment and others such as hangings, which can be more conveniently stored rolled up, are also not exhibited. Artichoke does, however, represent the bulk of this Gallery's painting and sculpture collection.
