FROM THE ROAD

The natural and human landscapes of the South Island made a strong impression on me when I was a student at Otago University in 1964 and 1965. I was very aware of the atmosphere of the country and its difference from

On returning to New Zealand after five years in Europe my involvement in photography grew and in 1975 I went to the South Island for a month on an assignment for Air New Zealand. The need to return and photograph the country in my own way, without a client in mind, became very strong. In 1979 I received a grant from the Arts Council, which allowed me and my family to travel for six months in the South Island. I photographed the area as I saw it, concentrating on the man-made landscape and avoiding the purely scenic aspects of the country. I spent nearly seven months in the winter of 1979 travelling over 18,000 miles through the South Island visiting my favourite areas two or three time, building up a collection of colour transparencies for later editing I chose to work in colour to show best the quality of light between the different regions and to illustrate in particular how people express their sense of colour in the way they paint their buildings and the way these figure in the landscape. Whatever I saw from the road that interested me I photographed. The freedom was overwhelming at first but gradually themes appeared as the body of work grew.

From the thousands of photographs taken I have edited 155 which appear in the book 'The South Island of New Zealand From the Road' published in June 1981 by Alister Taylor. Of the fifty photographs in this exhibition some are from the book and some taken from the pool of South Island work. They have been selected from a more particular viewpoint.
